Teaching

Vacancies
gov.uk

Looking to save money on your recruitment budget? Try Teaching Vacancies!

Teaching Vacancies is the free, national search and listing service from the DfE helping state funded primary and secondary schools save money on their recruitment advertising. It is now the largest source of primary teaching jobs listed directly by schools in England. It's also the second largest for secondary teaching jobs.

Thousands of teachers are already signed up for job alerts on the service and in the past year there's been over six million views of job listings on the site.

Teaching, leadership, and educational support roles can all be listed on the service and there is also a free application tracking system to manage and respond to candidates.

Reaching candidates across the country

Listing your vacancies on the service will help you attract a wider pool of candidates and help create a national platform for jobseekers to find their next role more easily. Multi Academy Trusts can also centrally list and manage vacancies across all their schools.

Putting money back into the classroom

With school budgets under pressure now is the time to move recruitment to this totally free service, which saves time and means money which can be put back where it's needed most, in the classroom.

To reduce your recruitment costs and recruit excellent teachers, leaders and educational support staff, visit: teaching-vacancies.service.gov.uk

“What I love most about Teaching Vacancies is that it is free, which certainly helps with my recruitment budget! Most importantly, we have been able to re-invest the savings we've made on recruitment directly into the classroom.”

Michael Eggleton,
Headteacher of Charles Dickens Primary School

“We were spending tens and tens of thousands of pounds each year on recruitment. Now, with Teaching Vacancies, we attract the same top quality staff through an easy-to-use service that is completely free. To date we have recruited 40 teachers to the Trust using Teaching Vacancies, as well as recruiting our first head teacher through the service.”

Cassie Buchanan OBE,
CEO of The Charter Schools Educational Trust
